

KaShaundra Clark, Florissant, MO.

I believe for many reasons the pipeline should remain open because it is essential in more ways than one. What happens when more than gas is taken? Does it just affect the homes, how about the other places and things that requires the use of gas or producing what is needed to maintain suitable living. What's going to be taken next? What happens when other things are being shutdown or taken away? What happens if it happens to you or someone you love? There are people who are in worser situations that rely on these things, not just the able-bodied individuals. We have to see pass ourselves and see how this affects others also. It won't just affect the STL area there will be some sort of widespread. Not all houses are completely electric, some people may have to move, people have to migrate to some place, some people may die or suffer, not just these few of many things but, if this is an environmental concern then we are all apart of this environment as a whole, therefore, who's next after STL, and then after that then who? It won't stop until you stop it.

Document Content(s)

116895.txt.....1